AFTER PAKISTAN, INTO THE TRUMP STORM

The tension with Pakistan seems to have fizzled out after a firm response. But just as the dust was settling, US President Donald Trump entered the scene with a bang. The challenge now is to play it smart with Trump, even as India continues to push Pakistan to the wall on terrorism

As someone who has participated in India-Pakistan track

II dialogues more than two dozen times over the years, including in Pakistan, my experience has been dismal. Their continual cycle of blatantly denying support for terror attacks, followed by partial acknowledgment months later, regularly broken commitments, and insistence on continued talks even as they launch the next terror attack, is simply not worth entertaining.
